This Dictionary of Kiikaonde

Is indebted to the following for its existence:
A pdf scan of the Kiikaonde English Vocabulary compiled in 2004 by D.B. Wright. (Which itself is based on the unfinished work of linguist J.L. Wright.) The book was provided to me by Mr. Mung'anga of Mufumbwe, but the scan was partially corrupted, and had to be disambiguated.
The Peace Corps RED (Rural Education Development) Kiikaonde training manual made by Ba Steven Chafukuma, Ba Gershom Kalonga and Ba Muke Mushima.
My friends in Mufumbwe: Fredrick Fubisha, Mumba Mwansa Fubisha, Kezia, Anita, and Priscilla Fubisha, and Jonas Mulenga.

Why a New Dictionary?

Accessibility

The accessibility issue is two-fold. Previous vocabularies of Kiikaonde have tended to under-explain both linguistic terminology and vocabulary items, which just makes it needlessly difficult for a lay reader to learn the language. This is understandable, given that our predecessors were working with printed mediums and had their heads up their asses; slim definitions and no example sentences make sense if you're trying to save space in a printed dictionary, but WELCOME TO THE CYBERVERSE, BABY.

The second accessibility issue is that Kiikaonde resources simply don't exist online and are almost impossible to find in physical libraries. D.B.'s Kiikaonde English Vocabulary, for example, isn't mentioned online anywhere. I had to get it from a guy! Like: not an institution — like: the call number of this book is "Go to rural Northwest Zambia and find Mr. Mung'anga's house and he's got one copy of this book that he printed himself but it's messed up because it was OCR scanned at some point so some parts of it are illegible."

The organization of past dictionaries has also been constrained by physicality in a way that can hopefully be avoided here (see: The Cyberverse, Baby). Physical dictionaries tend to be organized alphabetically, but alphabetization makes very little sense in a language powered by agreement and prefixes, where words like pangye and mungye—essentially the same word—would be pages and pages apart. For language-learning purposes it's kinder to have them under the same entry, so that you can think of them as one word with attachable and detachable prepositions. While alphabetization is helpful for looking up words in a print dictionary, it doesn't serve to elucidate underlying linguistic patterns. In digital documents we have an alternative: Control/Command F.

SUGGESTED USAGE AND CONTROL F

The organization of this work is predicated on the use of the control (or command) F feature rather than on alphabetical organization. If you're unable to find a word in Kiikaonde, try modifying your search by adding or subtracting vowels and removing prefixes. Some words have long vowels that make them distinct in meaning from otherwise identical words. Other words are listed primarily under their singular or plural form (kivwalo and bivwalo e.g.). In this case, drop the first one or two letters when searching. If you're searching for the phrase "shalayipo mwane", which could be spelled a few different ways because of ambiguity with the [ai] vowel sound, try searching "shala" or "shaala". I've tried to standardize the spelling and remove unnecessary double vowels, but in many cases it's unclear if double vowels indicate a semantic difference.

This is not intended as a study tool, but as a reference guide. You won't learn very much Kiikaonde just by reading through it. Talk to people. Point at things. Make flashcards. Be embarrassed.

Preface from the Kiikaonde English Vocabulary Preliminary Edition (2004) Compiled by D. B. Wright. Shoutout to D.B., presumably a real one:

It is not possible to acknowledge all the sources from which the words in this dictionary have been obtained. Our grateful thanks to the very many who have produced words hitherto unknown to us, and have spent many hours patiently discussing, checking, explaining and correcting earlier vocabularies. These include Mr. Shaantolo Henry of Solwezi Teacher Training College who has also provided valuable cultural material, Mr. K.C. Muyebaa and other members of the Kiikaonde Language Committee, Mr. Hurbert Kakonkanya, editor, of the Zambia Educational Publishing House, and Miss Doreen Adams, for many years at Mukinge (E.C.Z.), Kasempa.

The compiler of the dictionary should have been John L. Wright (Language in Zambia Grammatical Sketches, Institute for African Studies, University of Zambia, 1977).

However, his death in 1983 left this work to a less able compiler, who has endeavoured to provide a fitting tribute to his memory.

— D.B. Wright November 1994

The following have been mentioned by name or initials in the text:

'Dictionary of the Kaonde Language' by Broughall Woods (an early Colonial Government Officer in the Kaonde-Lunda area) - published by R.T.S. in 1924. I am grateful to the United Society for Christian Literature, the present holders of the copyright, for permission to quote from this work. Entries used have been checked by modern Kaonde speakers and the orthography updated. Mainly quoted for interesting cultural notes.

Rev. Charles S. Foster, missionary in the Kasempa area from 1917, and responsible for Kiikaonde language teaching for fifty years. Much of the vocabulary is to be found in his word lists, but he is only quoted specifically when he differs from others in meaning.

Chibanza - the late Simon; Chief Chibanza of Solwezi District. Words found in his book "Bufumu bwa bu Kasempa".

Ansell - W.F.H. Ansell, Ranger in the Game and Tsetse Control Dept. Solwezi District 1947 Quoted re. identity of animals.

Forestry Dept. of GRZ - (A.E.G. Storrs) book 'Know Your Trees', published by the Forestry Department, Ndola, 1979.

Fanshawe (Principal Scientific Officer, Division of Forest Research) - books 'Fifty Common Trees of Zambia' - GRZ 19472.

WORD FORMS
Nouns are normally shown in their singular form. If the plural is the more common form, the singular will also be given.
When the plural of nouns is regular it is not usually given; but when there is a choice of prefix, or when the plural prefix is irregular, or the singular prefix is missing (e.g. bookwe) or it is a"foreign' word, the plural prefix is shown. The regular, singular and plural prefixes of the noun classes are as follows:
The default plural, especially for borrowed words is Ma
Verbs are shown here in their shortest form — the root, followed by the stem of the distant past tense. For this reason, 'to' has been omitted from the English equivalent, except where the English word can also be confused with another part of speech, e.g. a noun, in which case, if the meaning is not clear, 'to' has been inserted in brackets.
Most Kaonde verbs have many derived forms. Only a few of these have been shown, mainly when the meaning or form is not obviously connected with the simple form of the verb.

Noun classes
1. MU (muntu)
1a. (No prefix) (bokwe, kabwe, ŋondo, sendwe)
1b. LU (luswa, lukasu) ??
2. BA (bantu, babokwe)
3. MU (muchima, mychi)
4. MI (michima, michi)
5. JI (jibwe, jeebele, juuba)
6. MA (mabwe, meebele)

LU- prefix of lu- (ma-) and lu- (n-) classes of nouns. Abstract lu- class nouns, plus lukuungu, lubesha, luvula, luya and lufukuchi (and possibly luto) take the concord lu- and have no plural. Lubaji and Lweendo also take lu- concord; their plural forms being mbaji and malweendo respectively. Other lu- class nouns take u-, wa- concords. Most LU- class animals form their plural with BALU-. As some plurals are irregular, all (known) plural prefixes of concrete nouns are shown. The lu- prefix can also be associated with size, or length, and can be prefixed to an existing noun, e.g. lunyama. When combined with ki- (e.g. lu kinyama) has the force of "big, bad" (as the 'evil beast' of Lumweekesho 13:1). Lu- may also replace ki- as the prefix of a descriptive noun when it refers to a number of people or things e.g. mwaanyike uji na kisaangajimbwe, baanyike baaji na lusaangajimbwe.
